I'm not going to lie, I miss Star Wars. I'm also going to avoid talking about the last movie in the franchise or anything related to it. Instead, I'm going to tell you about a series that was more fun than it was necessary. K-2SO, who was created by Roberto Orci and Alex Kurtzman, is pretty much the opposite of our Wookiee buddy. He's a reprogrammed robot who has a very un-Wookiee-like personality. While I enjoy an argument that proves that people should stop talking about what every single character in the movie is wearing, I'm just going to agree with you. If there's one thing I love about the Star Wars franchise, it's the gadgets. R2D2, C3P0, BB-8, Chewbacca... It doesn't matter who's on the screen, they all seem to have an abundance of cool stuff. And K-2SO's creator, Doctor Who's "Mr. Saxon" from The Day of the Doctor, was most definitely a gadget guy. Besides being able to shoot electric bolts from his eyeballs, K-2SO can generate high-explosive concussion blasts. But it's his utility belt that makes the droid so incredible. It can launch him, repel him, and levitate him. It's really something that gives him impressive flexibility that, as Orci says, "No one else has." You can take a look at the full list of K-2SO's abilities at his official site. And if you're still not feeling it, this neat video from T-Squad captures a little more of his awesomeness. [via EW]

Corticotropin-releasing factor-induced locomotor activation: block by the CRF antagonist alpha-helical C-terminal CRF. We have previously shown that the corticotropin-releasing factor (CRF) mediates some of the central actions of stress hormones in the intact rat. To determine which CRF functions are present in the brain, the activity of a highly selective CRF antagonist, alpha-helical C-terminal CRF (alpha-hCT), was examined. Male rats were tested for locomotor response to s.c. injections of CRF and its C-terminal fragment, alpha-hCT. Animals were pretreated with 5 microg of the peptide or saline to elicit a response. Other rats received microinjections of CRF, alpha-hCT, and then the CRF antagonist (alpha-hCT administered first and CRF administered second) into the rostral ventrolateral medulla (RVLM). Central administration of CRF and alpha-hCT elicited comparable increases in locomotor activity. By contrast, pretreatment with alpha-hCT attenuated the locomotor response to subsequent injection of CRF into the RVLM. The antagonistic effects of alpha-hCT may be the result of an antagonistic action at the nucleus tractus solitarius (NTS) or site(s) upstream of the NTS, an action at the locus coeruleus (LC), a combination of the two, or some effect peripheral to the central nervous system. The actions of alpha-hCT suggest that the CRF receptor associated with the locomotor response to CRF can function with both CRF and alpha-hCT.
